What Would Love Do Foundation Authors Human Rights Declaration

Global Humanity Bill of Rights Recognizes New Era of Unity Consciousness

Dayton, OH, USA (September 23, 2016) – What Would Love Do Foundation co-founder, Christine Horner, has authored the Global Humanity Bill of Rights in recognition of the early stages of humanity’s transition from separation to unity consciousness. What makes this document stand apart from previous declarations, treaties or charters is that it proposes a new era of cooperative living that offers an end to human-made suffering so that every man, woman, and child have easy access to shelter, food, water, healthcare, and education as human rights.

“We are evolving to the realization that all life is interconnected and interdependent,” says 2014 Dayton Literary Peace Prize nominated author Christine Horner. “Just as competition would be destructive within your primary family unity, it’s created a loser for every winner within our global family. It’s time for human exploitation to end. Working in harmony with an already abundant Earth is key so that all of humanity thrives rather than just a few at the expense of others.”

The Global Humanity Bill of Rights’ official global launch is November 11, 2016. Visitors have an opportunity to receive free leadership e-books rooted in unity consciousness. There are free sponsorship opportunities for organizations who would like to support the initiative, or you may join the online community by affirming the declaration.
